There days, there are more and more social media sites and applications such as Facebook or Twitter. Some people consider that such social technology makes us “more” alone while others believe that it makes us “less” alone. In this essay, I will support the latter argument.

We feel alone when we cannot communicate with others. For example, many of us feel lonely at night because there are almost no one nearby to talk to. So, if we have someone to communicate with, we will feel less alone. This is probably one of the reasons why social media has come into being. It enables us to get in touch with anyone wherever we are and whenever we want. For example, Twitter, one of the largest social networking services in the world, allows us to learn what other people are doing.

In summary, social media has given more opportunities for people to communicate with each other, thus helping them avoid feeling alone.
